. DISCUSSION {#sec1-4} ========== This is the first study to assess the attitudes and practices of obstetrician/gynecologists regarding epidural analgesia. We found that 32.8% of gynecologists were interested in learning epidural anesthesia. Despite this enthusiasm, only about half the respondents considered themselves to be capable of administering epidural anesthesia. The study results also revealed that most obstetricians were not fully confident in performing epidural anesthesia. The presence of untrained personnel at the time of epidural anesthesia administration was also noted. Only a few studies have specifically addressed the attitudes and practices of obstetricians toward epidural anesthesia. Bolm et al. conducted a study to assess the knowledge and performance of anesthesiologists in a tertiary care hospital in the United States.\[[@ref8]\] Respondents included 264 obstetricians from various specialties, including anesthesiology, who were asked to describe their own expertise and experience with epidural anesthesia. Of the 264 respondents, only one-fifth of the respondents had performed epidural anesthesia during a previous pregnancy. Results of the other study by Bhatia et al. showed that half of the respondents had never used epidural anesthesia.\[[@ref9]\] In a study conducted in the year 2009, to assess the level of obstetrician's knowledge about epidural anesthesia, questions related to the management of labor, the timing of epidural anesthesia, and the optimal procedure for placement were used to assess the knowledge of obstetricians. It was found that about half of the obstetricians who participated in the study were not aware of the recommendations of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.\[[@ref10]\] It is worth noting that while this study was about the knowledge of obstetricians about epidural anesthesia and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists issued a bulletin on epidural anesthesia in 2004, none of the two studies reported findings about the use of epidural anesthesia by obstetricians. This study adds to the limited body of literature by exploring the knowledge and attitudes of obstetricians/gynecologists regarding epidural anesthesia in Saudi Arabia.\[[@ref11]\] Respondents were from different universities in different parts of Saudi Arabia, thereby providing a snapshot of the knowledge and practices of obstetricians/gynecologists in Saudi Arabia. The findings of

Prior art includes the following U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,522,516; 4,554,849; 4,528,677; 4,565,986; 4,504,863; 4,604,788; 4,607,867; 4,661,711; 4,596,859; 4,611,278; 4,618,533; 4,642,462; 4,669,303; 4,662,127; and 4,781,697. Since the introduction of the Photographic Material Safety Guide (PSG) in January of 1986, to both encourage and enforce compliance, this guide and any associated products have been used by the public in making the right choices about storage, handling, disposition and use of photographic materials. A compelling initial motivation for the use of PSG products was that they insure the health and safety of photo lab personnel and consumers. To that end, PSG identification cards were provided to photo lab personnel so that they could inform customers of the inherent hazards of working with photographic materials. Unfortunately, despite this action and other educational measures, there has been an increase in consumer product failures, particularly when the chemicals are combined for the purpose of developing print-out paper. This, coupled with the fact that not all consumers know the proper guidelines for safe storage and use of photographic materials, has created an on-going consumer education problem. Since the advent of the PSG it has been realized by the manufacturers that a further deterrent to proper use of photographic materials was the need for the consumer to be made aware of the inherent hazards of mishandling or using photographic materials. PSG products included inexpensive plastic, peel-apart identification cards that were attached to printed material. They could be used for almost any category of photographic material including paper negatives, paper positives and paper prints. This invention teaches the use of inexpensive, adhesive-backed, high quality, full color photographic paper stock, which in conjunction with a PSG product, provides a visual and tactile presentation that allows consumers to evaluate the hazards of using photographic materials. Prior art U.S. Pat. No. 4,522,516 teaches an identification card comprising a plurality of layers adhered together. The layers comprise an index layer, an intermediate layer and a plurality of printed images. The layers adhere together via pressure sensitive adhesive. U.S. Pat. No. 4,611,278 teaches a packaging and handling system for photographs and negatives including a container
